BABE'S STYLE (& MAN) HUNT

MODEL Caprice Bourret is coming to Ireland to search for style – and a man.

The sexy blonde is joining designer Peter O'Brien and fashion mentor Angela Woods on the judging panel for new TV3 show Style Wars.

They will hunt for the country's newest fashion talent but the 38-year-old American said she is delighted to get to come here for another reason.

Caprice added: "I will be coming to Ireland for Style Wars every week – I will be virtually living here and I am so excited.

"I am single at the minute so I will be looking out for some gorgeous single boys out there.

"Hopefully there will be some – my friend Michelle Heaton came here and found a gem in Hugh.

"So you never know, maybe I could come over here and find Mr Right."

Style Wars will broadcast this summer and will feature 10 of Ireland's aspiring fashion talents battling to be the nation's ultimate style star.

The show is open to men and women over 18 – all that's needed is a passion for fashion and be able to know your haute couture from your high street.

Over the course of the summer, the contestants will compete in challenges and, at the end of each week, the judges will decide who makes the cut and who falls apart at the seams.

And as a successful businesswoman running her own lingerie company, Caprice knows all about the ruthless side of the fashion business.

She said: "It's very exciting to find raw talent and nurture it.

"I have developed from my own business, I have made a lot of mistakes on the way but I know what I am doing now.

"I know how to make a business work which is very important in a recession – to grow every year like I have.

"So hopefully I can use my experiences to grow and mentor others who are starting out in the fashion industry.

"And I really believe there is so much raw talent here and they can't reach out.

"So Style Wars gives them the chance to get noticed – even if they don't win, the whole country will see them and their talents and it's a great opportunity."

Whether you want to be a stylist, a designer, a personal shopper or even a fashion journalist, the team want to hear from you.

Caprice added: "I'm going to be looking for the all-round fashionista with a unique sense of style.

"I want someone who understands the commercial side of things too. If you are stylish but the consumers can't relate to you then you are going to fall flat on your tushy.

"I will be very critical – I won't trash people to make them feel awful but I want to guide and inspire people."

If you think you've got what it takes, the application form is available online at www.tv3.ie/stylewars.
